

Unfortunately, though, women had very few rights in everyday society. In Rome's early history, a woman's husband maintained complete control over her life. In fact, woman could not even make a simple suggestion to her husband. In this time, it would have been absurd to think a woman could vote or participate in government, as these were both restricted from her.

